Looking back to 1983, just before the bell system collapsed, AT&T established its American Bell subsidiary in preparation to compete in unregulated markets against various telecommunications equipment companies, and also against established computer vendors such as IBM and DEC. In 1984, American Bell became AT&T Information Systems (a better name for selling computers, along with the fact that they were forced to drop the name Bell in a breakup). Computer media at&T has deep pockets (even after divestitures) to compete with IBM. Different incarnations of incarnations Titan titles were seen popping up everywhere, and the world prepared for AT&T to take away a healthy part of the desktop computing market from IBM. Upstarts like Compaq and later PC Limited (which was an enigma for sleet AT&T execs), had no chance of holding large market shares after AT&T entered the picture. Pc business would be dominated by two titans. AT&T worked feverishly to develop PC systems based on 8086 and 80286 in collaboration with Olivetti in the mid-'80s, and also developed a wide line of minicomputers (3B series), some of which were very resistant to bugs and powerful minicomputer systems (the type of computers that maintained the most reliable and largest computer/communication network in the world that work – the Bell phone system), so far so good. nice one.
